

The Psychology in the Workplace Network (PWN) is an APA-sponsored network of psychologists and select non-psychologist consultants who are interested in working to identify and help build psychologically healthy workplaces. This network is open to any interested psychologist.

Members of the network:

- Assist in helping companies learn about what a psychologically healthy workplace is, invite companies that are creating environments that foster employee well-being to apply for APA recognition, and assist the APA Center for Organizational Excellence to gather data, through site visits about the practices that support this recognition. If you are invited to do a site visit, someone will provide you with all the tools and training you need to be able to complete this task.
- Will be able to engage in training and receive CE credits for becoming more knowledgeable about the psychologically healthy workplace model. There is potential to receive a certification in this process.
- Will participate in regular local phone calls or meetings to be able to identify and foster the role of psychology in creating a workplace that is good for employees and good for the organization.

Members of this network may have backgrounds in I/O Psychology, Consulting Psychology, Clinical Psychology, or other disciplines. Members are also regularly working to bring principles of psychological science to the organizations with which they work. It may be especially interesting to psychologists who are in leadership positions within an organization.